Laird I would advise reading Edelman's "Truth/Lies ..." books first. All quite good and informative. This tops off my own 40 years of investing wisdom, discoveries, and revelations about the good/bad of investment strategies and fads over the decades. Presented like a book of proverbs. It reminds me of Chairman Mao's Little Red Book, only it is reality instead of brainwashing. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Really good practical adviceBy ClaudReally good practical advice. Not a lot of surprising info given the data that is presented and what we all have learned throughout life, but it is good to hear it from someone else. The way that the data is presented and explained is great. I will be purchasing this book for nieces/nephews and tell them that they can skip a lot of the anguish and hard life lessons if they really pay attention to the messages in this book.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Then tell me why you compare the performance of your investments with the SP 500 Stock Index. You're gauging your success by comparing your investment results with the overall market, as measured by the SP 500, the Dow Jones Industrial Average, or some other stock-market index. If you're beating the market, you're happy. If you're not, you're unhappy. Guess what? Trying to beat the market is the wrong goal. In fact, that's a disastrous goal. Taking that approach sets you up for failure. Why? It's really very simple. And we need look no further back than 2008 to understand why. In 2008 the SP 500 lost 38.5%. If you lost only 30%, congratulations! You beat the market! Somehow I doubt you (or your spouse) would be thrilled at such news. Thus we must remember that "beating the market" isn't the point. In fact, only one thing matters when it comes to investing: achieving financial security. That is your one major goal. Think about it. The purpose of investing is to help you achieve your goals, whether that means sending your kids to college, retiring comfortably, or caring for aging parents. It's financial security that matters, not some benchmark that has no relevance to your personal life. People who focus on the stock market are missing the point. You need to emphasize your goals. I.
